Name: Yujin Chen

As a child, I lived in a traditional Chinese residential area, which was usually large and the residences all looked similar, except for the different landscapes between the buildings. This makes what happened inside the community even more impressive.

This is a story about a young child going to school, which is very close to home, about a five-minute walk, but even with such a short walk, there are many interesting things happen, picking flowers from the bad-tempered old man's small garden, picking up the dried radishes that someone has hung out in the square, crossing the road in a thrilling way... Each little thing represents a memory from childhood.
